Any person who is convicted of a Failure to Yield violation or certain other Right-of-Way violations is required to successfully complete a Right-of-Way course.

For convictions resulting from violations on or after Dec. 2, 2017:

- When the violation results in no harm or bodily harm, Right-of-Way course must be completed within 6 months or your operating privilege will be suspended up to 5 years.

When the violation results in great bodily harm, suspension will be for 3 months.

- When the violation results in death to another person, suspension will be for 9 months.

For convictions resulting from violations prior to Dec. 2, 2017:

- When the violation results in bodily harm, suspension will be for 2 months.
- When the violation results in great bodily harm, suspension will be for 3 months.
- When the violation results in death to another person, suspension will be for 9 months.

Right-of-Way/Failure to Yield Requirement for Reinstatement

If your operating privilege is suspended, you will not be eligible to reinstate until you have successfully completed the Right-of-Way course. This course has been designed to reacquaint you with vehicle right-of-way rules and provide awareness of keeping motorcyclists, pedestrians and bicyclists safe. Please contact your provider of choice to obtain the cost and duration of the class.

Approved right-of-way instructors and locations:

- Private driver training schools and safety organizations (both online as well as classroom failure to yield options are available)
- Traffic safety point reduction schools (note that the entire traffic safety course must be completed to satisfy the right-of-way course requirement)

After successfully completing the failure to yield right-of-way course:

- Please ensure that your instructor provides the Division of Motor Vehicles (DMV) proof that you have successfully completed the course.
- Once notification has been provided to the DMV, please check your driving status and eligibility to reinstate your operating privilege if you have been suspended.
